Health and Welfare Lasting Power of Attorney

The Health and Welfare LPA is vital to ageing people across a diverse range of lifestyles. If you intend to live with one of your children, for example, they would need to be appointed as your Power of Attorney, to be legally entitled to handle your welfare matters. They are not able to act on your behalf simply by being a family member.

Similarly, Social Services may very well decide to place you in residential care if you have no attorney or lasting power of attorney to explain that your preference is to remain in your home.

If you wish to join your friends in a particular care home, it is also important to have documentation laid out which clearly expresses your preferences.

Nothing is more important than your health, so don't leave your future to chance!

Obtaining lasting Power of Attorney for health and welfare enables you to make decisions about your welfare well in advance and retain power over your own care needs rather than allowing an unknown person from Social

Contact Introducer Advocates today and one of our friendly, fully qualified LPA practitioners will visit you at home to offer advice and work out a comprehensive solution to suit your requirements, in plain English.

Your will is then drafted and bound by one of our specialist will drafters in our offices and sent to you ready for signing.
